Board of Education responds to Paysinger lawsuit

Board of Education members responded to Beverly High principal Carter Paysinger's lawsuit at Tuesday's meeting, while several Beverly High alumni criticized the board.

Beverly High graduates Steven Fenton, John Hart, Jill Humphries, Alan Nierob, Jonathan Prince, Michael Suter, and Brad Turell addressed the Board of Education.

"For better or worse, a painful part of our district's experience is out of our hands," Prince said. "It's in the hands of the courts, the lawyers and the judges."

Paysinger filed a lawsuit against the BHUSD and Board of Education member Lewis Hall for discrimination and retaliation on July 16. The 32-page complaint included allegations that the BHUSD publicly disclosed Paysinger's confidential information, refused to investigate and respond to Paysinger's complaints, and subjected Paysinger to racially discriminatory statements.

"I made no racist remark and neither have my colleagues as claimed in the lawsuit," Hall said. "One can only question what motivates Paysinger in such a willfully counterproductive manner that can only adversely impact our students."

Paysinger filed his first complaint with the BHUSD on July 14, 2013. The BHUSD “failed to respond within the prescribed time period” regarding the second and third complaints made on January 30, and February 10.

Paysinger filed a government tort claim on April 28, which claims that he has been harmed by wrongful acts. The District rejected the claim in a May 13 letter.

On April 28, Paysinger filed one complaint with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing and one with the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, who transferred the complaint to the United States Department of Justice. Paysinger received the right to sue for both filings.

“I don’t call it racism, I call it harassment and hostility in the work place,” Nierob said. “If an employee wrote me up two [or] three times, and they went unanswered or undealt with [or] insufficiently responded to, I’d be put on leave or fired, not the employee.”

An e-mail was sent out to BHUSD parents and staff on July 21 stating that Paysinger will remain as Beverly High’s principal.

“Some have speculated that the BHUSD Board of Education intends to place Carter Paysinger on administrative leave as [Beverly High] principal for the upcoming school year,” the e-mail stated. “This is not accurate.”

Board members Brian Goldberg, Hall, and Lisa Korbatov stated their previous support for Paysinger through their record of voting to keep Paysinger as Beverly High principal. All three board members denied making the alleged discriminatory remarks.

“What I can tell you emphatically is I am not a racist,” Goldberg said. “But the fact that I even have to say that means that I have already lost. I have lost credibility in this community, I have lost credibility with my own children, and that will never be repaired.”

Goldberg said at a February 4 Board of Education meeting that only six members in the district had access to a confidential draft report that was leaked to the LA Times.

“When parents, students, community members and staff members raised a complaint about a sports camp that Paysinger was involved in, I voted to open an investigation into those claims,” Goldberg said on Tuesday. “As a board member, when issues are brought to my attention I have three options. The first option is to ignore it and to hope it goes away. The second option is to be involved in the cover up and hope that nobody finds out. The third option is to investigate, let that investigation play out, and take action based on that investigation. In reality, I only had one option and that [was] to investigate, find out what the facts are, and take action based on those facts.”

On Goldberg’s Facebook page in a thread of comments relating to Paysinger’s lawsuit, he wrote, “Everyone is denying that they leaked” the draft report.

Goldberg reportedly said that Paysinger’s lawsuit, along with Fenton’s columns published in issues #769 and #770 of Beverly Hills Weekly, were promotional stunts for Paysinger’s memoirs that Fenton co-authored, and will be released in Nov.

“From the moment the book was announced, Goldberg has played an important role in its launch,” Fenton told the Board of Education. “[Goldberg] enthusiastically [agreed] to be one of the first people

Rojhani donates to Thank Israeli Soldiers

Beverly Hills attorney Selena Rojhani has spearheaded donations to Thank Israeli Soldiers, a non-profit organization, to provide care packages to Israeli soldiers as young as 18-years-old.

“The effect that [care packages have] on these soldiers is unbelievable,” Rojhani said. “Not only do they know there’s an individual out there that cares about them, there are people outside of Israeli that care about what’s going on in Israeli, despite the media.”

Rojhani was introduced to Thank Israeli Soldiers through another organization called Jewish Woman’s Renaissance Project (JWRP), which organizes birth right trips for Jewish moms.

“You teach a Jewish woman something that inspires her and she’s going to inspire a community,” Rojhani said.

JWRP introduced the non-profit organization to “show that women can help Israeli soldiers.” Through Thank Israeli Soldiers, care packages, which include flashlights, clothing, food and other items, can be provided for one soldier or 100 soldiers, with the lowest donation at $18.00.

“It gets really cold in parts of Israel in the winter, and some of these soldiers don’t have enough money to buy boots,” Rojhani said. “They come from very poor families [who] raise their kids as best as possible on very little. Israel is a very inexpensive country and [the average person doesn’t] make a lot of money.”

Rojhani, a 1991 Beverly High graduate, went to Israel in 2010 and 2011 to deliver the care packages where she met soldiers as young as 18-years-old.

“One of the soldiers said, ‘The most important thing that I can do is keep my men and women going, to keep them motivated and to make sure that they know that somebody cares,’” Rojhani said. “These care packages do exactly that.”

to be interviewed for the book and over the past two years he has made himself available to me on a moment’s notice.”

A statement released by Board member Lisa Korbатов was e-blasted twice by the Beverly Hills Courier. She read the same statement at Tuesday’s meeting.

“Speaking as an individual and not as a member of the board, I am profoundly offended by Paysinger’s deceitful, groundless and unsupportable allegations that have been made against me,” Korbатов said. “I question his motive since the complaint does not seek any specific damages and he remains as principal.”

Korbатов has denied leaking confidential information discussed in closed session to the Courier.

“Using a newspaper to respond to your community is not the way you should be doing business as our representative,” Nierob said.

Suter, son of the late Lyle Suter, a long time art teacher at Beverly High, created a petition of support for Paysinger on July 18.

“Forty-nine people signed anonymously because they’re afraid of you and worried about repercussions of being known for putting their names on this,” Suter told the Board of Education. “A lot of the alumni have no faith in the board.”

As of press time, the petition has 421 signatures and was shared by 715 people on Facebook.

“The five of you are here to represent [the community]; you answer to us,” Nierob said. “We’re watching, we’re paying attention, and it’s not just tonight. You’ve ignited this and we’re going to follow through and watch everything you do.”

CNPA questions why leak investigation report is not released

California Newspaper Publishers Association staff attorney Scott Merrill questioned the Board of Education’s refusal to release the investigation results regarding a leaked classified draft report to the LA Times.

“They’re public people [and] they put themselves out there as such,” Merrill said. “[They’re] more likely to get disclosure as opposed to someone who is more private [who] didn’t get elected [and who’s] not putting themselves out there.”

The BHUSD retained the law firm of Rutan & Tucker at their February 18 special board meeting to perform an independent investigation into a classified draft document that was leaked to the LA Times, who reported on the contents of the draft document on February 3. The Board of Education voted 4 – 0 – 1, with board member Lewis Hall abstaining.

BHUSD changed from Rutan & Tucker to an in-house district lawyer to perform the independent investigation.

involved to consolidate the investigation with the outside firm already familiar with the issues,” the Board of Education and Superintendent wrote in a PACE e-mail that was sent to parents and families of BHUSD students on July 7 to refute statements made in former Board of Education member Steven Fenton’s columns published in issues #769 and #770 of the Weekly.

BHUSD general counsel Vincent Ewing’s letter to the Weekly regarding the Board’s decision to not disclose the investigation report, published in last week’s issue, cites Williams v. Superior Court, a case that applies to public disclosure of law enforcement investigatory records: “When an investigation is taking place, a document ‘may have extraordinary significance to the investigation’” and information obtained for the investigation may reveal identities of informants, and the “astute observer” may be able to tell “which clues the police have checked and which they have not yet found,” Ewing wrote.

Ewing wrote that “the public interest served by not making the records public outweighs the public interest served by disclosure of the record,” according to Government Code 6255.

But for high-level public servants, such as superintendent of schools or elected officials, usually a disclosure of investigations or of misconduct is required even if information were found groundless or completely untrue, Merrill said.

According to Article 1 Section 3 of the California Constitution, “the people have the right of access to information concerning the conduct of the people’s business, and, therefore, the meetings of public bodies and the writings of public officials and agencies shall be open to public scrutiny,” and should be “broadly construed if it furthers the people’s rights of access and narrowly construed if it limits the right of access.”

“When you’re a public official or anyone that is interpreting the act, they have to interpret it such that it promotes disclosure, or it promotes open government,” Merrill said.

The Weekly made a California Public Records Act request on June 9 regarding the leak investigation. Superintendent Gary Woods responded via e-mail, “I believe you will have access to the actual report by [July 12].”

After a follow up e-mail on June 13, Woods wrote, “We are making progress on having a redacted version of the report available to the public. We did not agree on

Planning Commission approves accessory structure for a Los Angeles main residence

The Planning Commission unanimously approved the construction of a pool house within Beverly Hills area with the main residential property located in Los Angeles at the July 18 special meeting.

Outgoing Chair Brian Rosenstein and incoming chair Howard Fisher were absent.

Jay Landers owns the main residence located at 1721 Monte Cielo Court, which is in the Los Angeles area code, as well as the adjacent property on 1297 Monte Cielo Drive, which is in the Beverly Hills area. A 10-foot wide strip of land located between the two properties is owned by the City of Beverly Hills.

According to Lander's attorney, Murray Fischer, the owners offered to purchase the property, but the City had no interest in selling the land.

"This property was on the market for a considerable amount of time," Fischer said. "No one could find a way to build a house, let alone obtain access to the property."

According to associate planner Andrew Sahakian, the ten-foot strip of land is steeply sloped on either side of the property and would require significant hillside alterations to create access to the property. Though the land would be developed and the proposed accessory structure is small, the site can only be accessed through a separate property that is located outside of the City of Beverly Hills.

"One property is in Beverly Hills, and one property is outside of Beverly Hills, we're going to be in some ways tying the two together," Commissioner Craig Corman said. "The concern I had was whether the tying arrangement would somehow grant the privileges to residents in Beverly Hills to the residents in Los Angeles."

Fischer mentioned that utilities that will be used through the accessory structure would be through Beverly Hills utilities and not through Los Angeles due to the specific location.

"I don't think giving them access to utilities that they will be paying for accounts as special privileges," Corman said.

Aside from using Beverly Hills utilities, the Landers and any other subsequent property owner will not be able to have any privileges allowed for Beverly Hills residents, such as voting in Beverly Hills' elections or attending any schools within the BHUSD. Should the property owners partake in any of those privileges, the approval for the variance will be voided and the structure will be demolished, according to the new conditions to allow the construction of the pool house.

Top shaded area is located in Los Angeles, bottom shaded area is located in Beverly Hills, and the middle shaded area is the 10-foot wide strip of land that belongs to the City of Beverly Hills

Other conditions included an encroachment permit and an indemnification agreement to indemnify the City of Beverly Hills of any liability that may occur on the 10-foot wide property. According to Fischer, the Landers have no problem with the permits.

"This is one instance where a variance is appropriate with the condition attached," Corman said. "It would be very hard to access that property for an actual residence."

the item yet and will be addressing it in the next few weeks," to which he clarified in a June 16 e-mail, "We are waiting for clear Board direction on the item."

Ewing responded with two official letters that stated, "the District requires additional time" and "any disclosable public records" would be made by June 27, and was extended a second time to July 11.

Upon inquiry on the status of the public records act request on July 11, Ewing wrote in a letter the same day, "The Board has considered releasing the documents and had decided not to release them."

"It's very rare that they would go this long to not report out," Merrill said. "Generally, it's supposed to be 10 days, then they get a 14 day extension [if] they have unusual circumstances. That still would have ended a month ago, at least three weeks ago. I think a lot of times they don't expect anyone to push back."

According to Government Code 6253 section C, which was cited in Ewing's first two letters, when a request for a copy of records is made, an agency has 10 days to respond. "Unusual circumstances" would permit an extension of up to 14 days through written notice. The code goes on to say that "no notice shall specify a date that would result in an extension of more than 14 days."

Unusual circumstances defined through the code include collecting requested records from "field facilities or other establishments that are separate from the office processing the request," searching for and collecting a "voluminous amount" of records, and the need for consultation and compiling data.

Ewing's letter cites Government Code 6254(k) and 54963(b) that the Board of Education was given the leak investigation report in closed session, and that the "materials are confidential and exempt from disclosure."

According to Merrill, there are numerous items that can be justified as a closed session items as opposed to open session items, such as pending or current litigation. But once the litigation or investigation is over, it must be reported to the public.

"As soon as your litigation is over the justification disappears," Merrill said. "If it was resolved or if they don't anticipate any further litigation then they have to disclose. If they disciplined [someone], it's going to say in the agenda item that they disciplined someone. Once they make a decision and they come out of closed session, then they have to report out."

Agendized closed session items to date that were posted since February 18, when the decision was made to hire Rutan & Tucker to perform the investigation, lists litigations that are anticipated and existing, and items such as a "safe and security plan" on March 11 and an extensive description on a California High School Exit Exam waiver item on May 13.

A closed session item has not been listed referring to the leak investigation report, and no public report was made on the Board's decision to not release the document.

The case of the American Federation of State etc. Employees v. Regents of University of California states that there are

HISTORICAL CHARM

Cultural Heritage Commission Chair Maralee Beck discusses her goals for historic preservation

By Nancy Yeang

You had a career in broadcasting. Tell us about that.

I had a very lucky career as a broadcast journalist for more than 20 years. I only worked in top ten markets, which is unusual.

I started off as the weather girl for a station in Washington D.C. [and] I was the anchor at most of the stations that I've worked at. If you are a successful reporter you get moved. I've worked in sensational cities [such as] Washington D.C., Chicago [and] San Francisco.

I covered the People's Temple, which was the mass suicide in Jones Town. The expression, "I drank the Kool-Aid" comes from that; 995 people drank Jim Jones' Kool-aid. He unfortunately was from San Francisco and most of the people came from [San Francisco who joined the] People's Temple.

I covered the assassination of Harvey Milk and the [San Francisco] Mayor, [and] then the outbreak of AIDs. San Francisco became a very sad place with all of those particular news events.

Finally, I ran the San Francisco bureau of Entertainment Tonight and I was there for about four or five years.

I was a very serious journalist for a number of years and it was a relief to get to Entertainment Tonight, but those were those were very interesting and sometimes not so pleasant [times].

How did you end up coming back to Beverly Hills?

I worked my way back. I got moved to San Francisco, and then from San Francisco when I ran the bureau for Entertainment Tonight I got moved to Los Angeles in 1986.

How did you become involved in the Beverly Hills Education Foundation?

I believe strongly in public education for everyone. I think that our schools are one of our biggest assets [in] the City of Beverly Hills [and] I think that California has such a great system all the way through the University system.

I was always involved in the children's schools and in education. I was a longtime member of WASC committees, which were the assessment committees, and I was the head of the site council at Hawthorne and I was on the Board of the Beverly Hills Education Foundation for a long time. I had the privilege of being the president and chair of the board.

I feel so strongly that education is everybody's ticket to a better life. In fact most of the charitable involvements that I've had over my lifetime have involved one way or another children and children's education.

How did you become interested in historical preservation?

After I was a broadcaster for so many years and traveling around, it became very difficult to be on the road and raise two children. I was lucky enough to be able to go into a family business for a number of years [and] when we sold the family business I was able to devote more time to my volunteer pursuits.

Early on I had begun volunteering at the Virginia Robinson Gardens. It is a county park in the middle of Beverly Hills but it's owned by the county of Los Angeles. They give children's tours to third graders in schools across LA county. When my son was in second grade and I was still working for Entertainment Tonight, I trained to become a docent to give children tours because those [were] once a month and I had enough time to do that.

I volunteered at the Robinson Garden which turned out to be not only my entire horticulture of education but also the beginning of my preservation knowledge.

The Virginia Robinson Gardens [was the first] housing estate [in Beverly Hills] that was built in 1911. Mrs. Robinson owns the department stores. The construction going on right now on Wilshire Boulevard is where Robinson Department store was [which is currently being demolished], right across the street from El Rodeo,

She and her husband settled in Beverly Hills in 1911, built this house and the garden to go with it, and then 70 odd years later she donated it to the county of Los Angeles as a public garden.

The work of the volunteer group there had been to restore and preserve this 1911 beau art building and that's when I began to learn about preservation.

I always knew the city's history was important, but here I was volunteering at a facility that is a living breathing example of why the past is so important to inform the future. We take kids on tours and tell them about [Mrs. Robinson's] life and that she wanted people to understand what life was like in the turn of the last century in Los Angeles.

How did you get brought on to the Cultural Heritage Commission?

Now we're fast forwarding 20+ years of my working for the Robinson Gardens and understanding how much goes into preservation. The Cultural Heritage Commission is brand new; we're only two years old. When there were postings for commissioners and [I was] watching landmarks right and left go down in the City of Beverly Hills I thought I might be one of the right people at the right time to be taking on these tasks.

In 2008, the Los Angeles Conservancy gave the City of Beverly Hills a "D" for its historic preservation program.

Because we had none.

This year in March, Beverly Hills received an A+ rating. Tell us about what the commission has done to help improve Beverly Hills' rating, considering the commission only started two years ago.

The commission has been instrumental in landmarking 23 properties in the City of Beverly Hills that are now local historic landmarks, but will be preserved for everyone to see and learn from.

In addition we have begun the very important work of trying to educate the residents of Beverly Hills as to why preservation is important.

We want to be able to proudly show our town. Beverly Hills of course is a world famous city and tourist destination. When people come to our town, obviously they want to see stars if they can, but they also want to see where it happened. If you don't keep places like the Beverly Hills Hotel intact, people can't experience so much of the glamour and the excitement of what happened at the Polo Lounge. If it were a completely redone place without any sense of its charm or its history, that would be very

"We have the luck of having five exceptionally competent commissioners who really take this all very seriously and put in the time and effort and diligence to make sure that what we are doing and what we will be leaving in the legacy for the city is properly considered and not arbitrary"
– Cultural Heritage Commission chair Maralee Beck disappointing.

The electric fountain on the corner of Wilshire and Santa Monica Boulevard resonates with so many people because Jack Benny always said that he had his vault underneath the fountain. When he had his radio and television show he was always going down to the vault underneath the Electric Fountain. When visitors come here they want to see that.

[When] Lucille Ball went on the assembly line and made candy for one of her shows, [it was at] the candy store Edelweiss on a Canon Drive.

The Annenberg Center is just the most beautiful example of repurposing a famous building. That's a WTA project from the 1930s with the Euros intact and they love that gorgeous lobby and that gorgeous building and added a fabulous new theatre. The whole point of preservation is not to keep things in mothballs. It's to conserve what you can of the past to inform the future.

What is the commission currently working on?

We're in the midst of completing a survey of areas of the city that were too young to have been included in previous surveys. For example, Trousdale didn't begin building until 1955 so a lot of those buildings are just reaching the threshold of 49 years. [Buildings] have to be of a certain age unless there is overwhelming significance or artistic merit. The survey will make it a little bit easier for people to know whether their properties, public buildings, or private homes are actually [designed] by significant architects [and] it will make it easier for people to know if they should be thinking about preservation or not with their homes.

I think we have 157 examples of buildings by master architects in the City of Beverly Hills. We're tiny and we have all of these fabulous buildings. We can't save them all of course and you don't want to save them all. But you do want to try to consider why they have their merits and are worth preserving.

We are also trying to educate the public about why this is important because not everybody either thinks or realizes that it is. We will be partnering with other preservation organizations to have some more workshops and information sessions. We have one tentatively scheduled for November. [This week] the California Preservation Foundation [held a] two day workshop in Beverly Hills [and] they have not done that in the past. We feel that they have chosen Beverly Hills partly because of our A+ rating from the LA Conservancy and partly because of the work that we've done in the last couple of years of making sure that Beverly Hills is able to keep much of its wonderful past.

We're developing a smart phone app that will very soon be ready so that people can take a tour of the Business Triangle and a couple of other [places]. There [will be] a short tour, a medium tour, and a long tour. You can use your smart phone to give you the history of the buildings you're looking at.

We are also working with [director] Phil Savenick who has been doing the Centennial videos. This is not in relation to his Centennial videos, [but] this is the work that the Cultural Heritage Commission has been doing and [Phil] and I have gone through some of the properties together to make some history [videos].

We have taken a very active stand and we're working as fast as we can to make some of these things that we're doing accessible to the public.

In the Weekly's cover story with outgoing chair Richard Waldow in issued #720, he said, "The controversy over Beverly Vista's demolition galvanized a lot of people in the community and made us aware of the need for a workable, reasonable preservation ordinance that would allow our city to preserve its architectural and historic treasures while still meeting our modern day needs."

What has the commission done to preserve historical architecture and still maintain, "modern day needs"?

Part of it is education. If a building is landmarked, it doesn't mean you can't remodel what's inside. There are tremendous ways of preserving pieces of architectural history without making it impossible to have modern day conveniences.

The Virginia Robinson Gardens is a wonderful example. It [was] landmarked by the National Trust as well as the State Landmark Board [before Beverly Hills landmarked it]. There are certain things that [were] done to the Robinson Gardens that are absolutely in keeping with the way it was when it was built. There's a brand new catering kitchen and handicapped access bathrooms for people, and they're working on putting in air conditioning, which certainly didn't exist in 1911.

It doesn't mean you can't change things, it just means you have to change things with permission and with some guidance from the planning department, and some attention as to what are the standards set by the Secretary of the Interior Rules.

The nomination for the 805 Linden Drive residence designed by Master Architect Wallace Neff sparked some controversy since the owners were uninterested in having their property be designated as a local landmark. How does the commission balance the property owner's desires with the commission's charge?

It's definitely something that is decided on a case-by-case basis and it is very important for the commission to understand the property owner's point of view as well as to explain the intent of the nomination. There's a lot of dialogue and research that goes into it.

Our commission does a great deal of due diligence about the issues. It's not just feelings that go on, there is list of objective standards. The property owner's objections always need to be considered and if you look at the record of what we've done with 805 Linden, we have continued to have dialogue with them for a very long time to discuss the validity of their objections. Much the way the Planning Commission has discussions, arguments and documentations on proposals, the Cultural Heritage Commission does the same. It has taken a great deal of time [but] we want to be as patient as we can because there is a newness about our proposals that might require more patience and listening as property owners learn about them.

But again we are talking about preserving the façade, the front of 805 Linden, its placement on the lot and the various heights and differences of the pieces of the building. We're not telling them they can't do almost whatever they will need to do throughout the house. We are just talking about the front of the house.

Our street was laid out by [landscape architect] Wilbur Cook. It was part of the City Beautiful Movement [which Design Review Commission Chair John Wyka talked about in Issue #770].

[Wyka] is absolutely right. Beverly Hills isn't built on straight, perpendicular grid. The streets are built with a curve, there was an intention behind the curve. Every street now has different trees so that the streets are distinguishable by the trees. It's one of the reasons why the Design Review Commission has such headaches with all kinds of fencing and changing of median strips.

There is a lot to be considered to keep the feel of the City Beautiful [Movement] and if you drive by 805 Linden, you will have no problem seeing why [with] the way it is cited on that particular piece of property. It was the first house built in the 800 block of Linden [and] it set the palette for what has become one of the more beautiful blocks in our city. What the Cultural Heritage Commission is trying to do, [by] fully using the ordinance, is to maintain that exterior façade that continues to make the street site beautiful.

Now whether it gets landmarked or not is up to the City Council. One of the privileges of being on a commission [is that] we are there to advise the City Council of what our beliefs are and [what] our study is, but it's ultimately their decision. However, almost anybody driving by [or] walking by can see what it is that is being illustrated by the beauty of how these houses inform one another with their placement on that street.

That's a difficult thing to convey without seeing [it] but that's the beauty of design and architecture and everything else, is how somebody's genius allows your eye to catch the value.

Tell us more about your family.

My husband, Andy Safir, is an economist. Both our children, Zachary Beck Safir and Erika Starr Safir, are proud [Beverly High] graduates. I went to Hawthorne [and] we sent the kids to Hawthorne and Beverly High.

Zachary was one of the editors of Highlights, went to Yale, and got his law and business degrees from Columbia University. He is an investment banker.

Erika went to Trinity College in Hartford, Connecticut, and [works as] an advertisement account executive.

[Andy's], who is a native New Yorker, father Marshall Safir, who was also a New Yorker, mother when she was widowed, move him out to Beverly Hills for a couple of years and put her three sons in the Beverly Hills public school system. My husband's uncles, New York Times columnist William Safire and Leonard Safir. They were also proud graduates of the Beverly Hills school system. They went to Beverly Vista.

What are your goals as chair this year?

We want to get the results of the survey out to people so that they can have a little more security about whether their property will be affected by the Cultural Heritage Ordinance or not.

We would like to make it simpler for people purchasing those houses in the future to know whether [or not] they are actually part of what the inventory of what cultural preservation will be looking at.

We have considered over 35 properties by master architects that haven't risen to the level of what we would consider landmark status.

Not only do we have a definite process, but we have the luck of having five exceptionally competent commissioners who really take this all very seriously and put in the time and effort and diligence to make sure that what we are doing and what we will be leaving in the legacy for the city is properly considered and not arbitrary.

"competing societal concerns – prevention of secrecy in government and protection of individual privacy."

Taking that point into consideration, the case states that records for "public officers and employees" are generally "considered as highly confidential," but if "the charges are found true, or discipline is imposed, the strong public policy against disclosure vanishes; this is true even where the sanction is a private reproof. In such cases a member of the public is entitled to information about the complaint, the discipline, and the 'information upon which it was based.'"

Carr raises $74,000 more than Lieu in recent fundraising cycle

Republican Congressional candidate Elan Carr's campaign announced on July 17 that he had raised $74,000 more than his opponent California State Senator Ted Lieu (D – Torrance), according to a press release.

For the cycle from May 15 to June 30, Carr raised $434,873, while Lieu reported raising $359,915. Carr ended the period with more cash on hand than Lieu with $245,822, and Lieu ended the cycle with $204,438.

"It's this kind of broad support that puts us in such a great position to win in November," Carr said in the press release. "Washington and Sacramento have completely lost touch with reality and we need to representatives who will fight for true accountability while working to advance common-sense reforms."

According to the Federal Election Commission's website, total contributions for Lieu's campaign as of June 30 is $1,205,627, and total contributions for Carr's campaign is $824,319.

"Ted Lieu has significantly overall out-raised his Republican opponent," Lieu's campaign manager Jeff Gozo said. "In June, Ted Lieu not only spent time serving his country on Air Force Reserve Duty but he was also in Sacramento voting for an on-time balanced budget that significantly reinvested in education."

Architectural Commission sends 8600 Wilshire back for restudy

The Architectural Commission sent a five-story multi use building proposed to be built on 8600 Wilshire Boulevard, at the cross street of Stanley Drive, for restudy to address concerns presented by the commission.

The project was previously approved in 2007. The new owners of the project, Palisades Capital Partners, re-designed the project with the same parameters of the originally approved project.

“What [the previous approvals] called for were a very massive box to be on Wilshire,” David Orenstein of Palisades Capital Partners said. “We decided to create a de-massing of the property. Our intention is to create something that’s not only unique to this part of Beverly Hills [and] this part of Wilshire, but [that] it’s respectful to the commercial side and respectful to the residential side.”

The partner architect for the project, Ma Yansong, designed a five-story building, using the first floor as commercial space, and the rest of the floors as residential space. The two floors above the commercial space would have a “green wall” that would be on the exterior of the residential portion of the building.

“As dramatic and as stunning as that is, we’re heading into one of the worst droughts we’ve ever had,” Vice Chair Andrea Apatow said. “If [you have] 15,000 square feet of panels and each [panel] takes 1.5 gallons a week, that’s a lot of water.”

According to the landscape architect Dean Helm, maintenance would occur about twice a month to trim or replace plants, and once a week to observe the greenery. The wall landscaping that will eventually be chosen will have a plant life of about seven to eight years. Helm said that the project plans to reuse water that collects in the irrigation system they will put in place to regulate the greenery system.

The residential units that will be on the upper floors of the structure will have translucent glass walls and a few transparent windows that will project a glow from the lights inside the building.

“We’re looking for a soft look,” Architect Ashok Vanmali said. “If you do that with standard glass it would look like a standard glass building.”

From the street side view from Wilshire, the project will be seen as a five-story building with the commercial units as the first floor. From Wilshire to Charleville Boulevard, the building will transition from a larger scale to a smaller scale, where two and three story residential units will be seen from the residential neighborhood.

Yansong included an inner courtyard for potential residents to incorporate a garden-like feel of Beverly Hills into the project. Commissioner Michelle Kaye said that from the view on Wilshire, the roofline was relatively uniform in the roof pitches when compared to the view of the roofline from the inner courtyard.

8600 Wilshire view of commercial and residential space

“When you’re on the inside garden court, there’s height differentials all through [the roofline and] it looks more organic,” Kaye said.

Peteris asked the architects about the maintenance of the translucent glass from the roof to the outside of the units, and how the crews were going to be able to access the units.

“It would be nice to understand the system because we didn’t,” Peteris said.

Vanmali said that specific details concerning access for crews to maintain the building and how maintenance will be able to upkeep the building still needed to be planned out.

The project will come back to the Architectural Commission at a future date with more details and solutions to the concerns the commission had.
